President's Message

Father's Day June 21st 2009

My father loved to work outside, and where he was there was I, helping him plant and transplant vegetables for our victory garden. This being war-time, most people had these vegetable plots. We kept chickens so he had to build chicken coops. My job was to straighten out the old nails he had to use since new ones were hard to get. I will never forget those days with my Father, and would still rather work with hammer and nails than do things like cooking and house work. (I guess you all knew that part).

Sincerely...Dede

HEREDITY

My hand there, lying on my knee-it seems now not to be part of me. I see its form, its shape, its tone but all as separate entities alone. I note the wrinkles furrowed in; New random flecks of liver brown are visible, I frown. The hand—can it be mine?-now speaks to me of old age creeping in, yet, see-some vestiges of youth are left, the flesh still moderately firm, not ready surely for the worm.. This thought consoles, but fades, and in its place my mind evokes a long remembered face, and with that face I clearly see, reflected in my memory. Another hand, not mine, but still the same, so much alike that I exclaim. “My Fathers Hand! It is my Fathers hand”.

And he long buried in a distant Land

Cecil Lubell
